Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

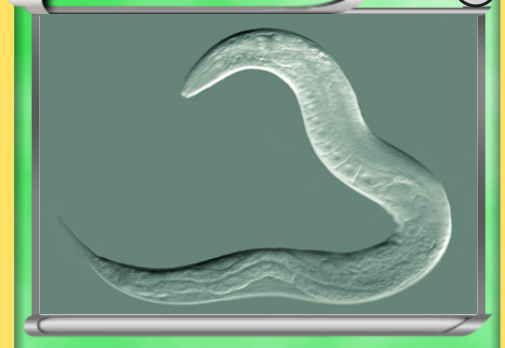
Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode



Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

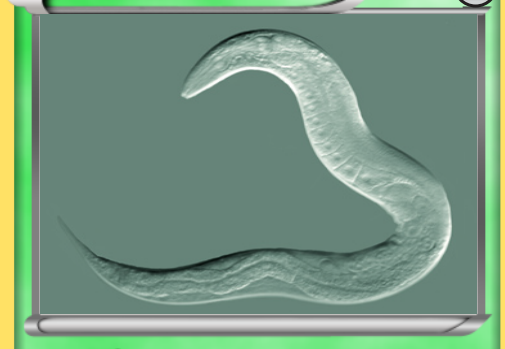
Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

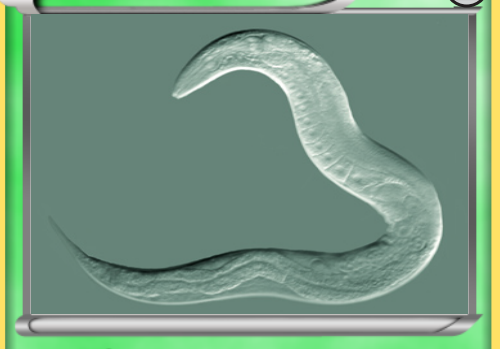
Nematode



Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode



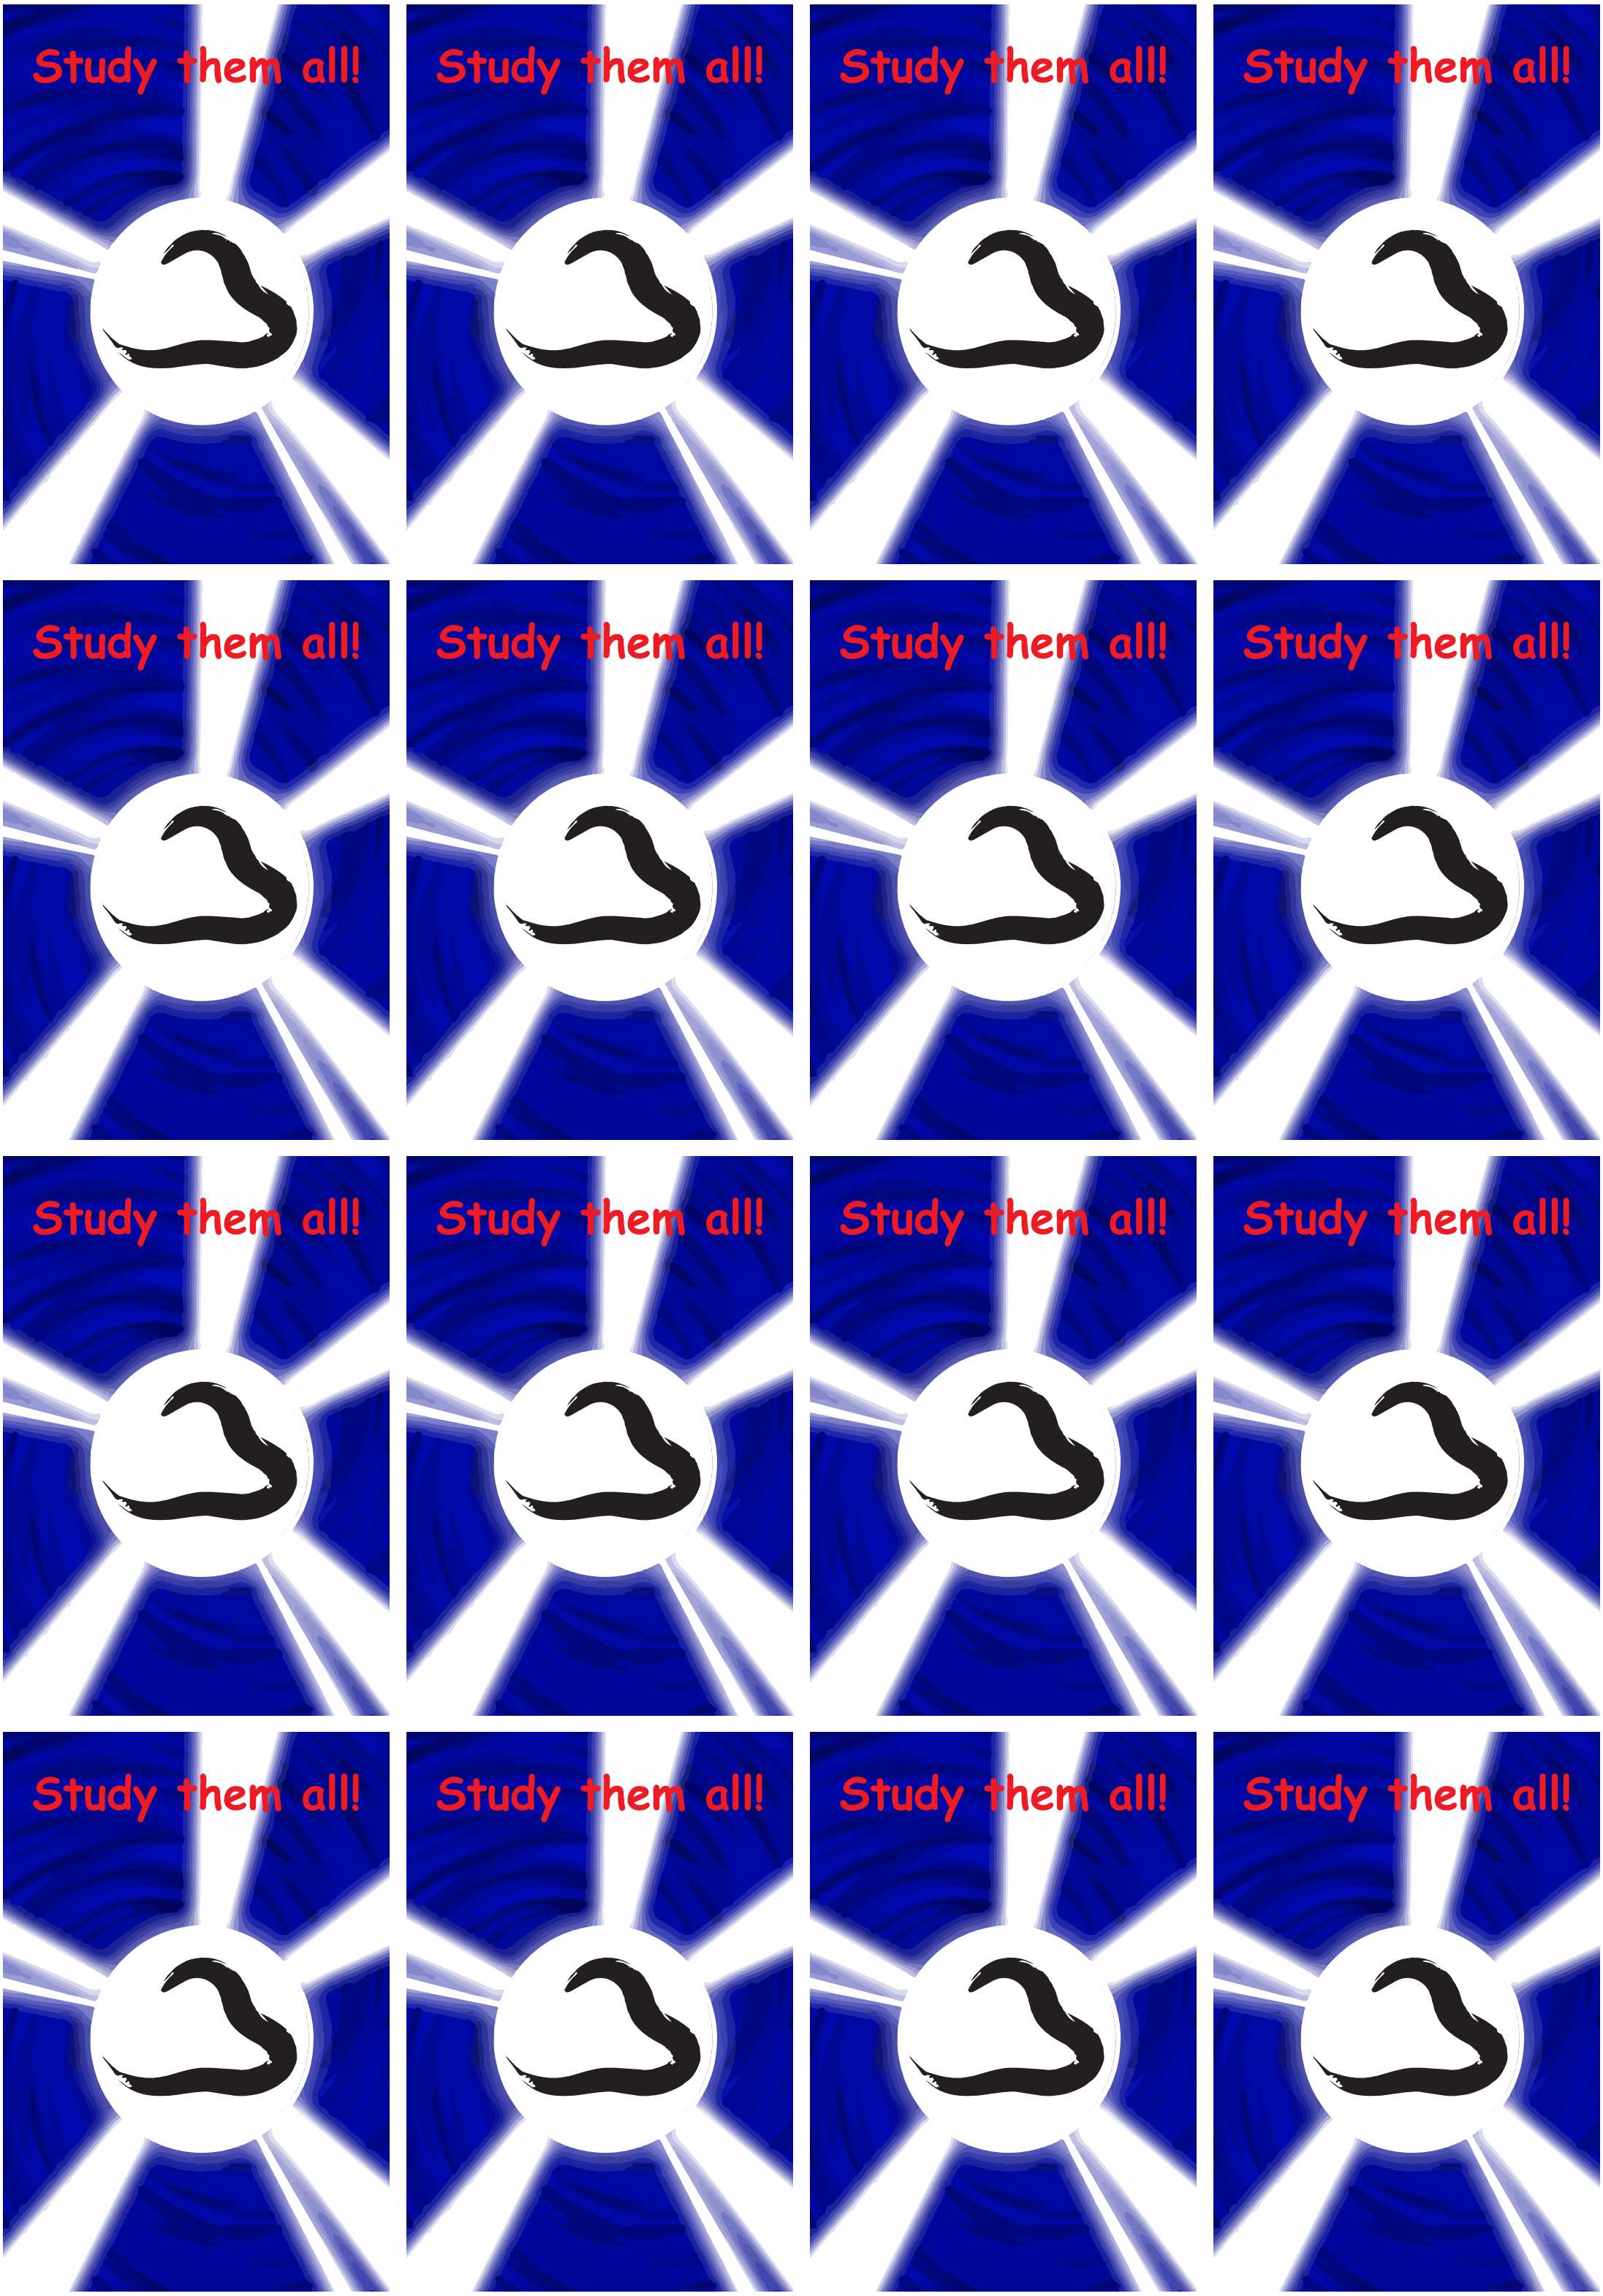
Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.

Nematode

Notable for research in:
-Genetics
-Embryology
-Neurobiology

Caeborhabditis elegans is a microscopic worm. It was first used as a model system for molecular biology by Sydney Brenner, work for whih he won the Nobel Prize. Their transparent body allows scientist to visualize cellular processes directly under a microscope.



Study them all!